Help for Suffering Memphis. The Yellow Fever is steadily extending its ravages in Memphis, where there are now terrible suffering and destitution All the humane and charitable resource of the city are taxed to the utmost to care for the sick, to bury the dead and to provide for the bereaved and destitute. In our news columns will be found a powe ful appeal, in the name of suffering humanity, for instant help. Cannot Wheeling out of her abundance give something to mitigate the horrors through which her sister city is now passing? Perhaps help never was more needed and neve could be more welcome. Three methods suggest themselves whereby movement for aid here might be quickly put in shape. Council might meet and vote it from the city treasury, as it did for Chicago; a public meeting might be called at the Court House and money subscribed on the spot; or a fund might be gathered to day by subscriptions in such sums as any telt moved

These certificates tween the several banks. These certificates are issued to such banks us require them, upon the deposit of first class secu-rities at the rate of 75 per cent of the present market value, as nearly as that value can be ascertained, of the securities so deposited. This seems to be reasonably sale, unless the bottom of everything our amployes, and that any company havialis out, and may be extended, according to the necessities of the case, so long as the banks have securities to offer. This puts the banks in a condition to give relief to their depositors. For instance, a stock broker who has good, substantial securities, is unable to borrow greenbacks upon them, but he has pressing need of $50 000 them, but he has pressing need of $50,000 in something that will pass for money. So he takes these securities which are fairly worth now $100,000 and obtains a credit at the bank of $50,000, which he avails of at the bank of $50,000, which he avails of according to his need in the form of certified checks. The bank in turn may take these identical securities to the Clearlog House Association and obtain upon them $75,000 in certificates, thus on the whole $70,000 in certineates, tans on the whole strengthening itself while affording relief to its customer. So the merchant may take to his bank good bills receivable and while the bank may not feel strong enough to discount the bills it may give the merchant a credit of 50 per cent upon their face, and in turn fortify itself, if need be, by obtaining from the cent upon their face, and in turn fortily itself, if need be, by obtaining from the Clearing House 75 per cent in certificates upon the same bills. We hear much about the necessity of an elastic currency. The new currency in the form of certified checks would seem to be sufficiently elastic in one direction at least to suit the most ultra partisan of elasticity, which generally means elongation, or the power of expansion. The system in force by the associated banks will no doubt work well, to a certain extent, but of course it cannot provide for the currency required in the country for the moving of the cropa to the seaboard nor can it relievs the foreign exchange market, though movements cation upon the particular individuals, Pinkerton was employed to investigate the matter, and test the accuracy of their suspicions. For the execution of this delicate service he selected a sufficient number of his best men to intrinsh four for every car in a train, one to be seated at each door and two in the centre of the car, the latter facing to the front and rear, so as to see every person who went in or out. These men were directed not to recognize each other, but to pay their fares, and otherwise deport themselves like ordinary travelers. Each one was provided with pencil and paper, and instructed to keep an accurate record of every person that entered or left the cars, noting the stations to and from which they traveled, etc., so that if at the end of London, Octobor 3-5 A. In this manner the Major was enabled in the course of a few days, to make a detailed report, which showed conclusively that nearly every conductor upon the section of road under surveillance had been sufficed the section of the section been guilty of swindling. He also ascertained that one of these delinquents owned property to a large amount in Philadelphia. Whereupon, as I was informed, Col. 8.—, the Vice President, sent for the man, and the following dialogue ensued:

"Mr. —, how long have you been employed as conductor on our road?"
"About seven years, sir."
"What pay have you received during

Conductor and Vice-President.

At a certain period, some six or eight years ago, the officers of one of our principal railroads had good reasons for believing that some of the conductors upon a particular section of their road were in the habit of rendering inaccurate returns of their receipts from "way-passengers;" and as they were unable to fix the defalcation upon the particular individuals, Pinkerton was employed to investigate.

"I do, sir." "Have you other any property in this

"I have a wife and three children."

"Will you do me the favor to inform me how you have been able in seven years to support your family and accumulate a fortune of forty thousand dollars upon a salary of eight hundred?"

"I have not the slightest objection to answer you ques ion, Col. 8—, provided you will suffer me first to propound a few nertinent interrogatories to you."

"Very well, Sir, I've no objections. What are they?"

"Will you, then, be so kind as to inform me how long you have been connected with the—— Railroad?"

"Something like ten years."

"What, allow me to ask, has been your salary during that time?"

"Fauppose it may have averaged about $5,000 a year."

"You have a family to support, if I am not mistaken?"

"That being the fact, sir, if you will do me the favor to disclose to me the secret of the process by which you, in ten years, have been able to transmute $50 000 into. ten times that amount, without any visible means outside your salary, I will most cheerfully tell you how I have managed, by turning an honest penny now and then

"That is all very well, replied the imperturbable Vice President, "but you seem to have forgotten that there is a slight difference between your status and mine upon the —— Railroad, in that you are responsible to me for stealing the Company's more very representations. are responsible to me tor stealing the Com-pany's money, whereas I am not account-able to you for my transactions. In view of this tact, it now becomes my duty to inform you that your services are no long-er required upon our road."

The facetious conducter probably an-ticipated this result, and with his charac-teristic coolness remarked: "In that event, sir, it may at some future time be-nent upon another road. Would it be saking too much for you to give me a let-ter setting forth your estimate of my abi-ity to perform the duties of conductor."
